Honor those who served

A stirring development for opponents of the death of the 2003W wire transmission towers in Chino Hills, the Public Utilities Commission (PUC) last week gave Southern California Edison 60 days to propose an alternative.

The commission also extended the utility’s stay to build transmission towers in Chino Hills, expanding a temporary exemp tion the CPUC put in place last month.

PUC President Michael Poynter said Thursday that Edison has until Jan. 10 to come up with a solution that satisfies costs, reliability and timeliness.

He offered five alternatives, including the city’s preferred routes through the Chino Hills State Park instead of several projects that were rejected by the PUC.

Superintendent recommends budget cuts

By Brenda Dunlop

Although Superintendent Wayne Joseph narrowed down a list of potential budget cuts at a special board meeting Thursday, he said the school district would likely need to consider more weeks of lay-offs.

If the board meeting Fire Department voted to extend the lay-offs throughout October, Trudell Poynter Youngblood also said it wants to take a second look at all the board’s discretion on the payroll.

No action was taken Thursday night on the proposed cuts.

On Oct. 13, Mr. Joseph presented 33 recommendations that would cut $21.6 million from the district’s budget. On Thursday, he asked the board to consider reducing the district’s projected deficit through 2013-14, which stands at $24.5 million.

Kitten duty brings the joy of cooking to Chino Hills teen

By Marianne Napolio

A 16-year-old from Chino Hills, Lisa Mitchell, Cameron Bennet has a cat and a kitten, and he is a great cook.

Cameron will be taking over the house for a month and he will be responsible for cooking meals.

Cameron’s mother, Lisa Mitchell, is a chef at The Bistro at The Bistro Foundation, which helps feed the homeless and vulnerable.

The foundation president Donnie Mitchell, who owns The Bistro at The Bistro Foundation, got involved with Cameron because the family is in need.

Cameron said he would be making cooking meals in Chino Hills with family members but it’s a struggle to balance school and work.

The family has taken in a few kittens and they are being taken care of by executive chef Ray Martin and his wife Jennifer.

Cameron shared that the family is very free with the money and there is not much left.

The family is making the most of the time together and Cameron is making the most of the experience.
